

[WAFER LEVEL PASSIVE COMPONENT]

Abstract

A wafer level passive component is directly formed on an active surface of the chip. Conductive patterns and a dielectric pattern are used to form a capacitor and electrically connect to contact pads of the chip. Therefore, the internal wiring of the chip can directly connect to the wafer level passive component disposed on the active surface of the chip, increasing the electrical performance of the chip.